You'll meet up with a member of the Guaraní brotherhood to learn about their language and customs, as well as how they've carried on the traditions passed down by their elders. Most notably, this includes their hunting secrets and ancient survival techniques. As you walk along a wooded trail through the grounds, your native guide will also talk about the importance of handicrafts to the local culture. The community's main source of income comes from the Guaraní people selling the baskets they weave with vegetable fibers, animal figurines they carve from wood, and necklaces and bracelets they craft using seeds. Then, watch as a group of children play songs on a set of rudimentary drums before talking with some of the families. Please note: This excursion includes walking through the jungle on uneven, damp terrain.
